

Creen haber encontrado parte de la Atlántida, ciudad sumergida cerca de Las Canarias, donde se rumoreaba antiguamente alcanzaba hasta allá La Atlántida.

Quien sabe - abr que esperar las excavaciones submarinas - con tal que no sea el National Geographic Magazine - porque esos no mostraran nada de lo que encuentren y que les moleste - vivimos en el Mundo de la Negación de todo lo que sea EXTRAORDINARIO.

Podría tratarse de una simple ciudad submarina de una antigua Civilización que allí existió hace miles de anos atrás y que solo tenia ramificaciones con África y no precisamente con la antigua Atlántida - mejor es la Ciudad o grandes murallones que se han encontrado frente a Cuba - a su lado Oeste - que iban a ser explorados pero que hasta ahora no se ha sabido nada después de mas de 3 anos de su hallazgo - porque claro el National Geopgraphic se tomo los derechos - Como se nota como le echan tierra a todo lo que sea "fuera de lo común", es increíble este Mundo de George Orwell - "1984"- en que vivimos - el Control y Silencio obligado de la Información deja Sordo...!

Veremos que harán con esta nueva Ciudad Submarina hallada.

Has The Lost City Of Atlantis Been Found?

11:32am UK, Friday February 20, 2009

A British aeronautical engineer claims a grid he discovered on the ocean floor off the coast of west Africa could be the fabled lost city of Atlantis.

Google adamant underwater grid lines are not the lost city of Atlantis.

But cold water has been poured on the idea by internet search giant Google, which says it is highly unlikely.

The grid is situated about 620 miles off west Africa in an area called the Madeira Abyssal Plane.

It consists of a series of cross-cross lines within a rectangular boundary about 3.5 miles down.

It was spotted by Bernie Bamford from Chester using a underwater exploration tool Google Ocean.

Mr Bamford says the image looks like a "man-made aerial map" of a city.

Dr Charles Orser, curator of historical archaeology at New York State University has described the find as "fascinating."

He said: "The site is one of the most prominent places for the proposed location of Atlantis, as described by the ancient Greek philosopher Plato.

Even if it turns out to be geographical, it definitely deserves a closer look."

However, Google are adamant the grid-like image has nothing to do with Atlantis.

A spokeswoman, said: "It's true that many amazing discoveries have been made in Google Earth.

"In this case, however, the image is an artifact of the data collection process, not the city of Atlantis.

"Boats use sonar to take measurements of the seafloor and the lines shown reflect the path of the boat as it gathers the data."

According to Plato's account, written around 355 BC, the city of Atlantis sank to the bottom of the ocean in around 9,700 BC after a huge earthquake.

Many people believe Plato's story is historically accurate but claim he has got the location wrong.

As a result, the search for the fabled city has spanned the globe. Other suggested sites include the Mediterranean, the Black Sea and the Caribbean.
